HISTORY

Wilhelmina "Billie" Church was born into a snake handling Christian sect in rural Tennessee. Her family's congregation believed Billie was gifted with divine powers of healing and protection as evidenced by the "miracles" the child worked by drawing her own blood and writing "angelic script" with it. As word spread of the child's perceived powers and the fervent devotion of her followers, the Tennessee State authorities launched an investigation which resulted in "Billie" being taken into custody. Her experience whilst under the care of the State was exceptionally traumatic and included several suicide attempts. Her unusual past has come at great cost; she remains paranoid that her cult will come looking for her and has a continuing history of symptoms associated with schizophrenia and disassociated personality disorder. Her past haunts her to this day.

RECRUITMENT

Church's unusual circumstances led to low-level surveillance by the DOW. However, monitoring was stepped up after one incident during her custody in particular; she was discovered to have carved the words "Luke 10:19" into the middle of her back, even though she was locked in a solitary observation room, had no sharp implements, and doctors deemed the feat physically impossible. Billie claimed, and maintains to this day, that "angels" did it for her. Father Paul Rawlings noted her extraordinary circumstances and engineered her release into DOW assessment facility. After years of intense deprogramming, therapy, and training in various blood-based magic systems she was appointed to Sergeant. Since her deprogramming, she has gone from withdrawn and modest to something of an explosive extrovert.

OCCULT RESOURCES

Sergeant Wilhelmina Church is able to cast powerful wards, enchantments and banishments through the ritual of drawing her own blood and writing potent sigils with it. This comes with an obvious physical price, both physical and spiritual. The pain and ritual of the act focuses her will and taps into something inside her that even the DOW is unable to pinpoint.

COMBAT RESOURCES

Sergeant Wilhelmina Church carries the minimum required level of protection as demanded by the army, a submachine pistol, which is her primary firearm. Her reluctance to use firearms resulted in extensive study of the nodachi, a large-two-handed Japanese sword. Church's nodachi has been custom crafted and she wields it with devastating effect.
